CINDERELLA

- In the days when there were still fairy godmothers there lived a girl called, Cinderella. She lived with her stepmother and two stepsisters.
- The stepmother treated Cinderella badly because she was very pretty and the two sisters were really quite ugly. Cinderella did all of the housework while her stepsisters had a lovely time going to parties.

- One day a special invitation arrived at the house. The prince of the kingdom, who was very handsome, was looking for a wife, so he invited all the young ladies in the land to a ball, to be held at the palace. The two ugly sisters were so excited they talked of nothing else all that day.
- On the day of the ball they made Cinderella help them prepare themselves and put on their new ball gowns. Eventually they were ready. They rushed out of the house, without a thank you, giving Cinderella many jobs to keep her busy whilst they were away.

- Cinderella felt very sad. Slowly she went to the kitchen to sit on her stool by the fire.
- "Oh! I do wish I could go to the ball at the palace," she sighed to the cat.

- Suddenly there was a swirl of glitter and stars, and there, in front of Cinderella stood a beautiful fairy with a golden wand in her hand.
- "I am your fairy godmother, Cinderella, and you shall go to the ball", she announced. "But first, we need a pumpkin, six mice and five rats." Cinderella was amazed. She quickly ran to find all of the things needed.
- The fairy godmother waved her sparkling wand and the pumpkin turned into a beautiful golden carriage. The mice became pure white horses, and the rats, smartly dressed footmen who would guide the carriage.
- The fairy godmother then passed the wand over Cinderella. Her old clothes changed into a beautiful white ball gown, her hair was sprinkled with glittering stars and on her feet were tiny glass slippers sparkling like diamonds.

- "Enjoy yourself, Cinderella, but remember to be home by midnight because the magic will end as the clock strikes twelve," the fairy godmother warned.
- When Cinderella arrived at the palace, looking so beautiful, everyone stared.
- The prince immediately asked her to dance. The ugly sisters, who were hoping the prince would ask them to dance, were very cross which made them look even more ugly.

- Cinderella enjoyed herself so much she almost forgot about the magic ending at midnight. When the clock started to strike twelve she fled from the prince with whom she was dancing. As Cinderella ran in haste she lost one of her glass slippers on the stairs of the palace.

- The prince picked up the slipper and exclaimed, "I shall marry the girl whose foot fits this slipper!"
- Cinderella managed to arrive home just in time, before all of the magic disappeared. The ugly sisters came home feeling very cross about the horrible girl who had danced with the prince all night long at the palace.
- The next day the prince visited every house in the kingdom looking for the beautiful girl whose foot would fit the slipper. When he came to the home of the ugly sisters they struggled to squeeze their feet into the tiny glass slipper but of course it did not fit.
- Suddenly from a corner Cinderella stepped forward and asked, "Please may I try?"
- The ugly sisters were horrified and tried to stop her but she placed her foot in the tiny slipper and it fitted perfectly.

- The prince was delighted that he had found the beautiful girl who had danced with him at the palace. Soon the prince and Cinderella were married and they lived very happily together.
